• Reading a textbook is an awful way to help me (individually) understand a subject. In this class, we were tasked with reading, then came to class where we sat through a very long hour and 15 minutes of Mr. Ghosh rereading what we already read. He is not easy to listen to. He thinks everyone taking the class should enter the room an expert in economics just from the weekly reading. This is not how students learn, particularly myself. The energy in the room was dead the entire semester, and I wish I had an instructor that would explain things more simply, as these concepts are unnatural for me. The only part of this class that taught me anything at all was the time we spent in groups discussing issues.

• I struggled to learn anything in this class. As I mentioned, Ghosh just wants you to do everything yourself. This leaves you with questions that you don't even know how to ask. If you answer a question in class incorrectly, his response is "no". Then, he expects you to just try answering again, about something you already don't understand.
